JD students wishing to pursue a joint degree program may do so contingent on acceptance by both schools in separate admissions processes. To ascertain each school's entrance requirements, tuition, financial aid policies, and deadlines, interested individuals are urged to visit each school's website for the most up-to-date information. Tuition will be charged according to the rates effective at the school in which the student is enrolled each term.

JD students who have been accepted by another school to pursue an additional degree must submit this form along with a copy of their acceptance letter to Columbia Law School's Office of Registration. Ad hoc joint degree programs may need to be referred to the faculty for approval.

Inquiries and requests for academic counseling can be directed to Jordan Carr, Associate Director for Academic Counseling, at jc5136@columbia.edu.
